

SPILL RESPONSE

Spill response is not always complex. It may be as simple as closing a valve and cleaning up minimal material. However, it is important to understand clean-up procedures for any size of spill in order to restore normal operations as soon as possible and minimize potential environmental damage.

Also important are the internal notification process, which will aid in spill prevention, and external reporting obligations to comply with legislative requirements.

Employees should be aware of all hazards within the workplace and control measures that are in place to deal with them. With regard to spill response, this means being aware of spill kit contents and location and spill response procedures that are in place.
