CONFINED SPACE AWARENESS

A confined space is a workspace that is fully or partially enclosed, is not designed or intended for human occupancy and has limited capability for entry or exit that may complicate first aid or emergency response. This Level 1 Awareness course provides a general understanding of the recognition and assessment of confined spaces, along with the controls required for the entry of a confined space.

CSA deems a confined space inherently hazardous, unless determined otherwise by a risk assessment. It is important that the potential hazards of a confined space be taken seriously in order to protect worker health and safety. This training has been developed to enable workers to identify hazards associated with a confined space, to be familiar with related legislation, regulations and standards and to be aware of requirements for entry to a confined space.

Who should take this course?

This course will assist individuals who work in or around a confined space.

NOTE: Completion of this course does not allow entry to a confined space. Employees required to conduct confined space work must take further, in-person training.

Course Overview

Upon completing this online course, participants should:

- Be able to identify what constitutes a confined space
- Be familiar with the hazards associated with working in a confined space
- Understand the legislation surrounding work in confined spaces (across Canada)
- Know the requirements for entry to a confined space

This online course also provides a case study of a recent Canadian confined space situation that ties in elements of the course to show real-life applicability.
